

Conservative Insurgency: The Struggle to Take America Back 2009-2041

The Conservative Insurgency is a decentralized, loosely organized movement of conservative activists who have been working to promote conservative values and policies in the United States since the late 2000s. The movement is made up of a diverse group of people who share a common belief in limited government, individual liberty, and free markets.

The Conservative Insurgency has its roots in the Tea Party movement, which emerged in 2009 in response to the Obama administration's policies. The Tea Party was a grassroots movement of conservative activists who were opposed to government spending, taxes, and regulation. The movement was successful in mobilizing voters in the 2010 midterm elections, and it helped to elect a number of conservative candidates to Congress.

In the years since the Tea Party movement, the Conservative Insurgency has continued to grow and evolve. The movement now includes a wide range of conservative organizations and activists, from Tea Party groups to anti-abortion groups to gun rights groups. The movement is also active in a number of states, and it has been successful in passing a number of conservative laws and policies.
